Abstract

Romania has got a series of natural advantages, which are still not sufficiently exploited, but which can become a great potential for the economic development. It refers to the primary sector (agriculture and wood industry), the agro-alimentary industry, and the areas of tourist attractions in the rural and urban areas.

Beginning with the year 2001, the rehabilitation of the economic development in Romania has become a priority for the macro-economic stability, the basic condition for the integration in the European Union and for the improvement of the general living standard in our country.

Keywords: quantitative parameters, qualitative parameters, economic development, macroeconomics indicators, inflation rate, productivity.
